

Conflicts of Interest

In all of our activities at Simon Scotting Tree Consultancy and Training, we must avoid any conflict, or the appearance of a conflict, between our personal interests and candidates interests.

Our obligation to conduct Simon Scotting Tree Consultancy and Training business in an honest and ethical manner includes the ethical handling of actual, apparent and potential conflicts of interest between Simon Scotting Tree Consultancy and Training and business relationships.

A conflict of interest generally arises when we have the opportunity to influence decisions in a way that could lead to personal benefit or improper advantage for you or others resulting in the compromise, or appearance of compromise, of our judgment and our ability to carry out your training & assessing duties objectively.

On some occasions it may be necessary to decline training or assessing work, due to both parties having a vested interest in the outcome, e.g. contract tendering.